

Bath Christmas Market

Saturday, 12th December dawned and before long a motley crew began to assemble outside The Hub ready for a great adventure to that epic city, Bath. Luckily it wasn't raining so spirits were high. A lovely journey through the countryside followed and we eventually arrived at Bath. We were only allowed a few minutes to disembark but we were soon tramping up towards the town centre.

Some of us know a lovely little café, tucked away, so that was our first port of call. In the centre of town there were stalls (well, sheds really) selling many fascinating objects, food, toys, etc. The general atmosphere was festive and everyone we met was happy and cheery.

I and my friends had a lovely lunch with a fine glass of wine at Garfunkels - lovely venue - and then split up to wander some more. Can't believe Father Christmas waved to me!

I spent an hour or so at the Fashion Museum but others shopped, went to the carol service in the Cathedral (they shut the doors on me!). We all finally assembled at the allotted time at the coach park, very satisfied and happy. It began to rain in earnest just as we were leaving. So, a good day for all. Sue Wallis
